MAGYAR FOLKLORE VERSES.

Ah, how muddy's our country lane
After autumn rains have scale'd the dust!
But worthy, worthy is the girl I love
Of all that can a youthful lover move,
And Lmy top boots muddy make Willingly for her sweet sake.

Wrinkled my top boots are and long,
Upon their heels gilt spurs shine bright.
They'll clank the time to dance and song.
How all the girls will smile tonight!
—"A Girl's Wandering In Hungary."

ASHES OF ROSES.

On that particular morning I was in a decidedly sentimental mood, because the day before I had heard a young and charming woman accompanying herself at the piano and singing the tenderest of romances in which during the last note the butterflies of the song linger at the heart of the roses.

And the garden in which I was walking was quite of a character to foster this gentle frame of mind. It was not wild or overgrown.

Its flower beds, where blue, red and yellow balsams were ranged with as much precision as the Sevres cups and Saxony statuettes on a whatnot of a provincial housewife; the sand of its paths, where the rake had left markings as distinct, straight and exact as the lines in a bar of music, and its correct and uniform borders, stiff as the frills of a dress that has not been crushed, seemed to suggest the ambition of a very pleasant ideal—an ideal in perfect taste, without violence or exaggeration; narrow, elegant, pretty and quite suit ed to furnish water color subjects.

A July sun lavished its gold and threw into the garden all the infinite that a bouquet is capable of holding.

A butterfly which was fluttering around library and the statement of the statement around like two flower petals set free by the wind brushed past my hand, leaving on it a little of its fine, white

"White butterfly," said I, for the re membrance of the song led me into such conversation with this delicate winged creature, "white butterfly, do not hasten away, but stay, rather, and settle down on this leaf-a flower would take too much of your attention-and listen to a question which I have al-ways wanted to ask you or one of your

The butterfly poised himself on a leaf. "I am listening," said he. For why should he not have answered, since I had spoken to him?

"Frivolous lover of roses and lilies," I began, "whence comes this delicate powder you scatter from your wings as you fly from flower to flower can you tell me? I am sure you must have suggested the arts of the toilet to the perfumer, for yours are the only wings that scatter whiteness like a puff."

The butterfly said, "'Tis strange." But as he had nothing to do he condescended to enlighten me. I am sure we should learn many things that are not in books and not known by learned men if we chatted more frequently with the insects of the woods and fields.

When auburn haired Eve was born at 16, an age at which the women of our time do not linger half long enough in the miraculous Eden, teeming with life and youth, she was plunged at first into an ecstasy of admiration at the sight of so much magnificence, and not the smallest pang of envy poisoned her heart. Even before she had gazed into the nearest spring all creatures crowded around to do her homage, and after having seen her own radiant reflection she conceived a profound feeling of compassion for all other created things.

The splendid lights in the lion's mane, luminous in the sunshine, could not rival the tawny brightness of Eve's long, floating locks.

Why should she have been jealous of the swan, since her own throat and arms were made of living snows, or why of the great vines in the forest, her own embrace being far more treacherous and more sweet?

might have hoped to rival her eyes had they not had a softer and more exquisite azure.

In fine, she looked at all things, and a great wave of pride came over her.
"Without doubt," she said, "all is very good, but then what of it all?"

And thereafter her favorite amusement was to sit under a tree and pass all the day kissing the rosy tips of her slender fingers.

Till one day she saw a rose.

The rose was there before her, as yet scarcely a rose, almost pale in its triumphant grace. It opened and widened, radiant as a star, luminous and living, almost human, like a woman,

A tiger passing that way lingered to gaze on it and wept from tenderness.

Then Eve felt something stirred within her. She understood that throughout all eternity she had a rival, Beautiful as she was, the rose was not less beautiful. Perfume against perfume, grace against grace, to the end of time their charms would be pitted against one another and there would be an endless and unceasing struggle. In vain impassioned poets of all ages would try in enthusiastic madrigals to prove to their mistresses the defeat of the sovereign flower. Eve had no illusions on the subject. The rose would always defy her, and to woman's eternal humiliation she would be compared to her splendid and victorious rival.

A sadness, of which you can form no idea, took possession of her, whose supremacy, acknowledged by all other created things, was disputed by a mere flower. She no longer had any pleasure in the limpid streams, whose clear waters mourned her bright image. The swans, whose whiteness had not rivaled hers, still sported on the azure lakes, but Eve no longer watched them.

All night she dreamed bitterly of her rival and tossed uncomforted under the cold indifference of the stars. For hours she would remain seated under a tree without once kissing the slenderest of her rosy finger tips.

So great was her despair that at last she resolved to destroy the rose that had dared question her title to incomparable beauty. Alas, she knew only too well that a dead rose did not mean the disappearance of roses altogether. They would bloom again every springtime, every summer, to the shame of lips less red and of skin less rosy white. But at least Eve would have avenged the first insult.

First she thought she would tear her enemy to pieces, trample it in the dust among the stones, then fling it to the furious wind as it passed. She had once seen a vulture seize a lark; so would she have liked to tear the rose.

However, she bethought herself of another torture. She built upon the sand a little pyro of dried grasses, lighted it with a glowworm, and picking the rose tossed it into the fire. A shudder passed through its delicate petals, as with a law plaintity appropriate as, with a low, plaintive murmur, it yielded up all its perfume, its charm, its rosy whiteness, its life and incomparable grace to the devouring flame.

At last nothing was left on the dying embers but a little heap of white dust—the ashes of the rose—and the woman, in whom savage instincts were already rife, was satisfied.

But the butterflies in the garden of Eden were mad with anguish, for they leaved the manufactured the manufactured to the manufactured the manufactured the manufactured to the ma loved the rose so hated by the woman.
Never again, quivering with pleasure and delight, would they settle on its trembling petals, never again brush with open wings the perfumed mysteries of its heart.

While the fatal act was being committed they flew wildly round the mer-ciless executioner, but Eye did not even see them, so entirely was she given over to her revenge. And now, as she walked off triumphant, they drew near to gaze upon the pale remains of their be-loved lying on the little heap of extinguished grasses.

At least they would keep as much of her as they could. So in a tumultuous swarm they fluttered down upon the precious relics, sometimes singly, sometimes all together, rolling themselves in the ashes, enveloping themselves in her

And ever since that time the fine white powder, scattered from the wings of butterflies, is the ashes of the rose.

The Absentminded Man.

An amusing case of absentminded ness was experienced by a young south sider the other evening. The young man is usually of a bright nature, but for some time past his friends have been noticing that he does some peculiar Not long ago he was at a reception, and a few minutes before clos-ing time he went to the cont box and secured his hat and coat. Then he walked up stairs to the dancing floor and picked up another coat and walked home with it on his arm. Arriving at his home, he found that he had one coat on and another on his arm. next day he found the owner of the ex tra coat, and mutual explanations followed and all was well. But that has been eclipsed by his latest exploits. He had finished his toilet and started for the street. As soon as he made his appearance he was greeted with smiles from everybody who saw him. He walked down the street and could not imagine what made the passersby smile at him. Finally he reached the restaurant where he takes his meals, and then he realized that he was carrying some-thing in his hand. He looked at it and found that he had carried the lighted lamp from his room and had walked several blocks along the main street with it in his hand.

Another case is cited concerning the same young man. At the office where he is employed he has occasion to an-swer many calls at the telephone. One evening he was reading a book in his room when an alarm clock rang in the adjoining room. The absentminded youth got up and commenced to yell "Hello! Hello!" and when the occupant of the other room inquired as to the cause of the yelling the young man sneepish manner, thought it was the telephone bell ringing."-Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph,

Talk It Over.

I have learned some things in the course of a long business life and still have a great many others to learn.

But the chief thing I have learned can be condensed into one nugget of wisdom in three words, Talk it over.

If thy business enemy offend thee, don't smite him on the cheek. Take him by the buttonhole in a friendly manner and talk it over.

Some one tells you that Smith, down the street, has said or done something to your detriment. Perhaps he has, and perhaps he has not. If he has, your policy is to prevent his repeating his remark or deed in the future. If he has not, you don't want to do him an injustice, even in your own mind.

Put on your hat, leave your temper at home, go down and make a friendly call. Be neighborly, frank, open. Tell him the truth and ask him for equal frankness. Nine hundred and ninetynine times out of a thousand the whole matter will be explained and straight ened out in five minutes, and you will part as personal friends rather than as personal and business enemies. You will both feel better, you will live side by side in harmony; the earth will be brighter, the sunshine clearer, your own heart lighter and mankind take on a more friendly aspect. Don't get mad and rush to your desk and send a scorching letter; be a man and a Christian and go yourself.

Talk it over. —Hardware.

A young woman about to be presented at court receives the fullest instructions as to her behavior. She is told how to dress; how to manage her train; how to courtesy correctly. Every incident is carefully rehearsed so that she may commit no blunder in the presence of royalty. If all this trouble is worth while for the satisfaction of one brief moment, how infinitely more important it is that a young girl about to enter into the sacred precincts of womanhood, should be properly instructed in all that concerns a life-time of possible happiness, or possible misery.

properly instructed in all that concerns a life-time of possible happiness, or possible misery.

Rivery mother ought to see to it that her daughters are healthy and strong in a womanly way. She ought to make them aware that any neglect or irregularity of the special functions of womanhood may result in life-long weakness and disease.

Any mother or daughter may write concerning these delicate ailments, with the utmost confidence to Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y. Her letter will be answered free of charge with suggestions for self-treatment at home, by which these complaints may be overcome without need of mortifying examinations.

Dr. Pierce has had over thirty years' experience in the treatment of women's diseases, and is an eminent specialist in this particular field of practice. His "Favorite Prescription" cures completely and permanently the most obstinate cases of feminine weakness and disease. It heals all inflamed conditions, strengthens and tones the nervecentres and the entire womanly organism.

For prospective mothers and nursing mothers, the "Favorite Prescription" is a perfect strength sustainer.

An amusing story is told of how the late Lord Fitzgerald discomfitted a treas. ury official who was sent over from England to complain of the excessive expenditure for coal in the lord chief justice's court.
